Once upon a time, there were ten little goblins who lived in a cozy cave in the heart of a deep, dark forest. They were all very different, with their own unique personalities and interests. But they all had one thing in common: they loved to explore.

One sunny day, the ten little goblins decided to go on an adventure. They packed their bags with food and water, and set off into the forest. They walked for hours, until they came to a clearing. In the middle of the clearing was a large, old tree. The tree was so tall that its branches reached up to the sky. And on the branches of the tree were ten little houses.

The ten little goblins were so excited. They had never seen anything like it before. They ran to the houses and peered inside. Each house was different, and each one was filled with all sorts of wonderful things. There were houses made of candy, houses made of gingerbread, houses made of chocolate, and even houses made of ice cream.

The ten little goblins spent the rest of the day exploring the houses. They ate candy until their tummies were full, and they played games in the gingerbread house. They even took a nap in the ice cream house. When the sun started to set, the ten little goblins knew it was time to go home.

They said goodbye to the houses and the tree, and they set off back through the forest. They walked for hours, until they finally reached their cave. They were tired and hungry, but they were also very happy. They had had a wonderful adventure, and they couldn't wait to tell their friends all about it.
