Table 1. Stages of the Patient Feedback Response Framework

Stage	Leading to action	Leading to no action
Normative legitimacy	Team actively listens to patient feedback and want to make changes	Team do not value or are not interested in patient feedback they see no need to change
Structural legitimacy	Team have ownership of the problem and have the autonomy and resources to make changes	Lack of ownership or understanding of the problem. This can be due, for example, to lack of leadership, low morale within the team or poor staffing
Organisational readiness	There is support from the organisation to make changes. This may be from a matron or service manager, from corporate nursing or even from the trust's board, or may require interdepartmental working	There is no commitment from the organisation to make the required changes. Reasons for this can include bureaucracy and inflexibility, as well as a lack of resources and unwillingness from outside the team
