The Rise Of Capitalism And The Crafts

The rise of capitalism in the Renaissance led to a number of changes in the relationship between crafts and capitalism. Prior to the rise of capitalism, craftspeople were typically organized into guilds, which controlled the production and sale of goods. However, with the rise of capitalism, the guilds began to decline, and craftspeople became increasingly independent. This led to a number of changes in the way crafts were produced and sold, as craftspeople began to compete with each other for customers.

The Industrial Revolution further exacerbated the decline of the guilds, and led to the rise of factory production. Factory production was much more efficient than craft production, and it allowed for the production of goods on a much larger scale. This led to a further decline in the demand for handcrafted goods, as consumers began to prefer factory-produced goods that were cheaper and more readily available.

Third, capitalism has led to the rise of new forms of organization, such as cooperatives and collectives, that can help craftspeople to compete with factory production.
